

Ecumenicism and modern Bible translations

Ecumenicism is a fellowship of different faiths and religions meeting as equals having sufficient things in common to be able to do this. For this to happen there has to be no doctrine or beliefs that cause problem to other religions so that they cannot fellowship with them. This means Christianity has to be modified to alter doctrine and beliefs so that they do not offend other religions and faiths so that there is nothing to stop fellowship with them.

Ecumenicism is necessary for the one world religion of Antichrist to be able to be formed. This one world religion will not be one faith for all but all faiths agreeing as one, each with their own belief system which is compatible with all other faiths in this one world religious system.

To do this the King James Version of The Bible has to be replaced and removed as an accurate representation of what God said in His Bible because its doctrines forbid ecumenicism and fellowship with non-believers. So modern Bibles need a Greek text that says what they need to say to promote ecumenicism. They found this in three codices: Codex 2742, Codex Sinaiticus and Codex Vaticanus which they could use to alter the traditional Bible to say what they needed it to say. Unfortunately, 2742 and Sinaiticus are proven forgeries and Vaticanus does not qualify as a manuscript able to be used for Bible translation.

Codex 2742 was proven to have been written between 1860 and 1860. Codex Sinaiticus has two witnesses to show it is an early 19th Century forgery and Codex Vaticanus is a 5th Century manuscript and not a 4th century one so that it falls outside what is defined as a reliable manuscript for the purposes of Bible translation.

So, they have no real basis for making the 20% of the changes they have made to the traditional Bible text for the purposes of making a bible with doctrine that will allow unhindered ecumenicism. These changes are made on forged codices so are not acceptable for the purposes of Bible translation.

This is why things like: The Bodily resurrection of Jesus, The virgin Birth, the Divinity of Jesus, His Miracles, Hell, evil demons and many other things are altered because other faiths and religions do not have them and to believe in them would cause problems with ecumenicism. This is also why Genesis Ch 1 to 11 are declared to be myths and the places mentioned in The Bible are considered fictional so that the Bible is not considered accurate because its archaeology is not considered accurate. This allows modern theologians to alter it because it is considered to be no longer a special God-inspired book and removes these things which are a threat to ecumenicism.

For ecumenicism to occur you need to remove the authority of The King James as this also removes who Jesus is and allows them to make Him out to be a good man who never did miracles and who was promoted to be a God like the founders of other religions removing this major barrier to ecumenicism.
